

The Deadliest Exhibition.

By Leroy Hart, Tye Hart, Takira Simon Brown, Reuben Maynard, Josh Santospirito, Jamal Akbari and Jasper Kelly.

A mural about individual art practices coming together; an exhibition about people and place. Each artist created a stencil to add their unique illustration to a mural they painted on a shipping container. The central illustration reads DEADLY, connecting to the Indigenous-run space Nayri Niara, and the Indigenous land we're on.

Leroy Hart is a waka waka Indigenous dancer. Through his own business, he shares his culture with the broader lutruwita community. He is part of In Place Design, a local Indigenous artist group building and selling woodwork and furniture.

Tye Hart is a waka waka Indigenous dancer and an intern in the events crew at Nayri Niara. As well as from dancing, Tye loves playing rugby.

Reuben Maynard is an Indigenous woodwork artist with In Place Design. Reuben loves working with epoxy resin. A mind bustling with ideas, he enjoys the grounded feeling that being an artist brings.

Jamal Akbari was born in Afghanistan and lived as a refugee in Iran before coming to Tasmania. He's been painting since he was 10, and does so when he's happy, sad, or needs to relax. His go-to themes are animals, flowers and birds.

Takira Simon Brown is a palawa artist who has been making art since she was 12. She's been a busker on the streets of nipaluna, a documentary maker and a musical stage Performer.

Josh Santopirito is a multimedia artist and graphic novelist based in nipaluna. He loves his veggie patch and his chickens and one day hopes to somehow make art about both of those things.

Jasper Kelly is a multi-disciplinary artist, working from silkscreen prints to large-scale murals that are all connected by his distinguishable characters and silly themes, often referencing Australian culture and imagery with a playful twist.
